THIS IS A HEADLINE

Wunderwaffen is German for "wonder weapons", and was a term assigned during World War II by the Nazi propaganda ministry to a few revolutionary "superweapons". Most of these weapons reached the combat theatre too late, and in too insignificant numbers (if at all) to have a military effect. Even if they did, the "Wunderwaffen" mostly failed to fulfill their propaganda-inflated capabilities. Most soldiers, and many civilians, realized that...

AND THIS IS A HEADACHE

The buzzing sound of the V-1 flying bomb's pulse jet engine indicated the overflight path, which reduced the terror bombing effect to the general target population. Additionally, although the engine's cutoff prior to the final dive to the target (of early V-1s) could be disconcerting because of the imminent local danger, the silence was also a...

I QUITE LIKE LONG HEADLINES

Although the Wunderwaffen completely failed to meet their strategic objective of turning the tides of World War II in Nazi Germany's favor at a time when the war was already strategically lost, they represented designs and prototypes that were extremely advanced for their time...
